

Editorial

Welcome to the first volume of the Kent Student Law Review, a student-led publication aiming to provide a platform to promote the philosophy of Kent Law School and the unique work undertaken by its students! We seek to publish theoretically informed critical legal scholarship that situates law in society, completed by the best students and subjected to rigorous peer-review by students and academics. Our aim is to provide students with the opportunity to enter the world of academia and publishing whilst at undergraduate level, and to support the postgraduate community by affording them the opportunity to have their work published. Finally, we feel that the work produced by some undergraduates is of such an exceptional quality that it requires recognition and celebration. The Kent Student Law Review is in such a position to show the legal community the unique, diverse and intellectual stimulation that the University of Kent provides, which sets us apart from the vast majority of black letter institutions across the country.

We are extremely grateful to Kent Law School for its continuous support and guidance. We would also like to thank Professor Rosemary Hunter, Dr Vicky Conway and Anne Bottomley who constituted the Review Committee during the past academic year and graciously helped us to make this first publication possible. Finally, we would like to extend our thanks to all of those who submitted articles to us, for without them there would no be Law Review in the first place.
